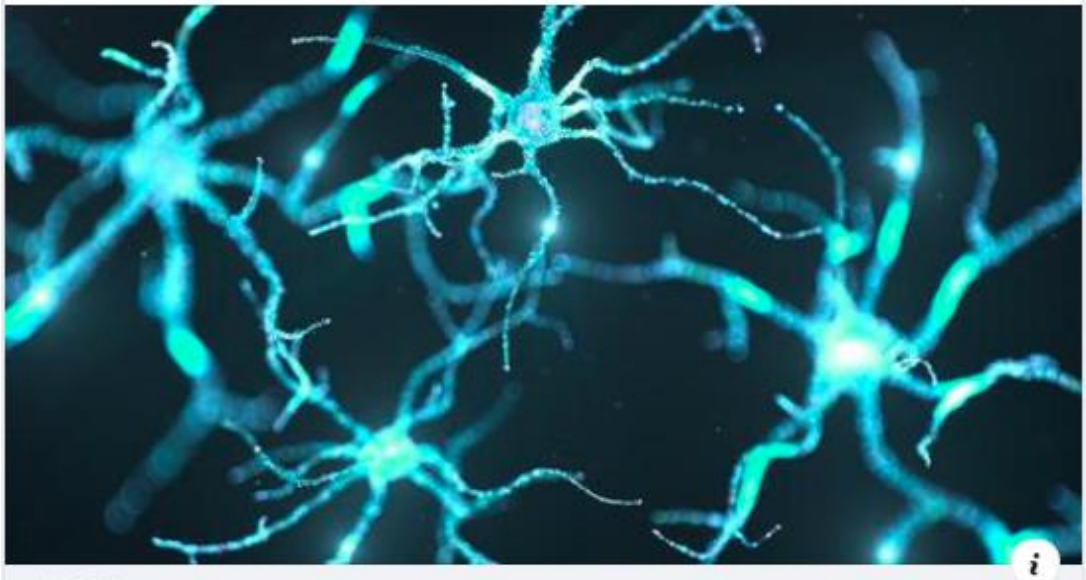

EXHIBIT 57

National Institutes of Health (NIH)
April 13 ·

Social species, like humans, naturally sort themselves into hierarchies in a group and the rankings can affect behavior. Two new NIH-funded studies of mice show how different brain areas respond to and drives group dynamics like social status, competition, and dominance. Understanding these mechanisms could help provide insight to competitive behavior and certain mental health conditions and neurological disorders.

You need to get your act together, lifting covid restrictions on all illegals and migrants at our boarders but extending restrictions on our young children in schools, and extending masks mandates. This after health department comes out with detrimental study on the mental and social affects of lockdown and masks on our children. The monumental damage done to our kids for 3 years, 3 years of child abuse. No one trusts our healthcare anymore all the lies, and the horrendous past history of experiments on citizens is still going on. How much taxpayers money went for this BS study? Get your priorities straight or don't you have any
